The AI mention scorecard

Ten minutes. Same question, three tools. Repeat every week.

Date _____ City _____

My category _____

HOW TO RUN IT

1. Open three tools
ChatGPT, Google's AI Mode and Perplexity, in private windows, signed out.

2. Ask what a buyer asks
Same words every time, with your category in it. One row below per question.

3. Fill in the table
Were we named? Was what it said about us right?

4. Click every source
Write down what it cited. Those are the places it reads.

5. Pick one move
Fix the biggest gap first. Run it again next week.

SCORECARD

Question a buyer asks	ChatGPT		Google AI Mode		Perplexity		Sources it cited
	Named?	Right?	Named?	Right?	Named?	Right?
Best vendors for [my category]? The shortlist question
Is [my company] secure? Where does the data live? The security person's question
What does [my company] cost, and what does it replace? The finance person's question
How does [my company] compare with [competitor]? The comparison question
Your own question, for the person who will use it

THE FIVE MOVES

1 Say what you are
One plain page. Say what you do, how it differs from the old way, and when each makes sense. Include an honest comparison.

2 Prove it with a number
Publish one number only you have, such as error rates by document type. Statistics, quotes and named sources get cited more.

3 Answer every role
One page per person. Security: trust center, compliance FAQ. Finance: pricing, ROI calculator. Operations: docs, migration guide. Headings are the question; answer it in the first sentence.

4 Be where the AI reads
Click the sources it cited. Start with those: analyst reports, “best vendors” lists, customer stories. Trade press, Reddit, LinkedIn and reviews are worth checking too.

5 Test every week
This scorecard. Click the sources. What you find decides the next move. Then run the loop again.

A starting point, not a guarantee. Nobody outside the AI companies knows exactly how answers are chosen, and it changes often.

Jaydip Sikdar · jaydipsikdar.com